b. SECURITY LOCK SHORTCOMINGS:

Mr. Schwartz, Physical Security Chairman, introduced Mr. Fred Brandt, Department of State. Mr. Brandt presented the results and findings of the independent studies of the Interagency Advisory Committee on Security Equipment (IACSE) of Group 1 and Group 1R combination locks, which were conducted last year under the sponsorship of the IACSE lock subcommittee (Attachment 2). Mr. Brandt informed the Group that the Department of State, Central Intelligence Agency, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and Department of Defense have taken lead roles in addressing the government-wide impact of and potential solutions to this threat and have prepared a paper for the Group (Attachment 3). Mr. Brandt informed the Group that it appears that the current Group 1 and 1R locks are vulnerable to computer and technically enhanced manipulation techniques. Previously established 20 hour protection against surreptitious entry apparently has eroded to four hours or less when attacked by state-of-the-art technology. []

25X1

A consensus was reached by the Group detailing what interim steps could be taken to control and to address existing vulnerabilities. Specific long term issues that impact the future direction and continued safeguarding of national security information and assets were also considered. The following recommendations were presented by Mr. Brandt: []

25X1

(1) Advise the lock manufacturer that the government will be undertaking a thorough review of specifications for Group 1R locks with the idea of revising them. []

25X1

(2) Initiate action to develop new lock specifications and test standards. []

25X1

(3) Identify and coordinate government agency efforts to develop potential near-term countermeasure technologies. []

25X1

(4) Establish a near-term government laboratory capability to evaluate attack methods, countermeasure techniques, and test standards for combination locks. []

25X1

Mr. Leek indicated that the Naval Civil Engineering Laboratory (NCEL) could review the IACSE study and come up with cost estimates, as well as validate the IACSE study results and develop draft lock specifications and test standards. []

25X1

ACTION: NCEL is to prepare a cost estimate for validation of the IACSE study results and for the development of new test standards and specifications, including a draft federal specification. []

25X1

The Chairman queried the Group as to what should or could be done to revise the existing procedural security policy dealing with classified information. Mr. Garfinkel, IS00, suggested that IS00 Directive 1 (paragraph 2001.43) be reviewed and, if substantive corrective changes
